Why Cub Scouting?
Cub Scouting’s strength is that it’s a well-rounded program positively affecting every area of a boys life. Cub Scouting encourages boys to achieve a deeper appreciation of others, peers, parents and adults. Scouts learn the value of working together.

Cub Scouting provides boys with a sense that they are important as individuals. They learn that their Scout family cares about each other. Cub Scouting promotes activities that lead to personal responsibility and high self-esteem. A Scout can look at himself in the mirror and be proud of who he sees looking back.

How Cub Scouting works
Your boy is a member of a Den. A Den consists of boys all the same age who meet when it is convenient for the families. A Den Leader (usually a parent) is in charge of coordinating the activities with the families which include games, crafts, songs, ceremonies and lots of fun. Dens may do trips and activities outside of their normal meetings as well.

Dens are members of the Pack. A Pack meets once a month with all Dens together. The Cubmaster leads Pack Meetings, which is made up of fun activities, special awards, and information about all of the upcoming fun. The Pack also organizes many extra activities and trips as a large group.

Parents too?
Absolutely! Volunteering can strengthen the bond between parent and child and help the Pack grow. Either as a leader or helping at an event, there are lots of ways to join in the Scouting fun. Training is provided.

What does it cost to be in Cub Scouting?
Boys and parents are responsible for a pre-registered $62 annual fee, with the option for a subscription to the "Boys Life" Magazine.
